SCARED BY A BIG GORILLA

A MUSEUM MONSTER AT LARGE IN LONG ISLAND WOODS.

The Residents About Setauket Afraid to Go Out at Night Because the Gorilla Infests the Neighborhood-He Kills Sheep and Has Fun With Everybody.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3 .- The villagers of Setauket, L. I., believe there is a gorilla lurking in the woods which border their town, and they are fearful of their lives in consequence. The farmers go armed to their work in the fields and do not venture out alone after dark. Their wives would as soon defy an army of mice as leave the shelter of their homes, and the children are afraid to go to pasture for the cows, and in some cases have to be escorted to and from school. The nutting season is at its height, but the children dare not venture near the woods. The colored natives, many of whom go nightly to Stony Brook, two miles distant, to buy rum, now make the trip in groups armed with axes and pitchforks.

Selah Strong is a farmer of Setauket, who has a fine flock of Southdown sheep. Two weeks ago the pick of the flock was found one morning dead in the field with its throat horribly mangled. There were marks of claws in the flesh, and a spot of soft ground near by was an almost human footprint. The sheep was skinned and then it was found that its back was broken. Farmer Strong was puzzled. A man, he argued, might have broken the animal's back and left the footprint in the soft ground, but he could not have torn the flesh about the throat and left the claw marks. He finally concluded that a man had started the job and that later a beast had finished it.

Two nights afterward Jacob Satterlee, who lives about a mile from Farmer Strong, heard a fearful squawking in his chickenhouse. He londed a double-barrelled shotgun and went forth. The chickens had quieted down, but on the floor beneath the roost were three fat hens whose heads had been literally torn from their bodies. There was nothing to indicate who or what had been guilty of the slaughter.

The "b oody butcher," as the unknown trespasser came to be called, remained veiled in mystery for several days. A few evenings since, however, Farmer Jim Addis met with an experience which has satisfied his neighbors as to the true character of the intruder. This is what occurred, as told by himself to the reporter;

"I'd been up in the hills all day plowin', and about dusk I put the team to the wagon and started for home. My off mare was a little lame in one foot and I was drivin easy. We came down through the lane to the highway, and I stopped and closed up the bars after me. Then I climbed back into my wagon and we headed down into the holler. I was nigh onto the big white oak at the edge o' the swamp when the nigh hoss, Billy, pricked up his ears and took a scent o' the air. He did not seem to like it, and the mare was up to something pesky, too. I naturally looked to see what was wrong, and the first thing I knew we passed within twenty feet of a big ape of some kind. It was just in the edge of the bush and stood on its hind feet graspin' the limb of a saplin' with one hand. It made a move towards us, and and my nigh hoss gosh durn near jumped through his coilar. The mare was frightened, too, and they lit out of that holler like they was colts. I wasn't exactly scared, but I looked around and saw the brute watchin' in the middle of the road, and I thought I would let the team had two good, square looks at the animal. He stood nigh onto five feet high. His legs was thin up to the knees and then they was quite full. His arms was the same, and be had a little head. He was hair all over, and I didn't see no tail."

This was the story which, connected with the inhuman butchery of sheep and chickens, frightened the quiet village folk. Then the natives began to wonder where the animal had come from, and a party of Sound fishermen was discovered who alleged that a few night previous a South American trader had sought shelter in the harbor of Port Jefferson, three miles down the coast, and that they had a couple of good sized gorillas on board. It was further alleged by the fishermen that the animals had escaped while exercising on the deck, and that only one of them had been recaptured. Nobody could be found by the reporter yesterday either in Setauket or Port Jefferson who knew who the fishermen were that had told the yarn.

There are many of the villagers of Setauket who have been exercising their imaginations to increase the sensation. A darky named Jerry Woodchuck, a famous hunter, is at present in the lead. He has paralyzed the colored colony by a tale that on Thursday, while hunting for coon in Nassakeag Swamp, he came across footprints in the mud which measured twenty-two inches in length. He followed them, so he says, and came across a tremendous gorilla, at least nine feet in beight, who stood up to his knees in water and pounded his chest with both fists. Jerry Woodchuck discharged his gun at the beast and fled, or at least that is what he tells his neighbors. Henry Sanford, a farmer, told a grocery crowd at Stoney Brook the other night that the gorilla had stood in the middle of the road and refused to allow him to pass. The animal, he said, slapped its chest vio-lently, producing a sound like a blow on a hollow log. Farmer "Hi" Calkin's son and a schoolboy named Sherman Hawkins each told their playfellows that they had met the gorilla in the woods. Two strange men passed through Setauket on Wednesday, who said they were looking for a gorilla which had escaped from a Brighton Beach museum.

Asking for a State Law. DANVILLE, Va., Nov. 3 .- An important meeting of the chamber of commerce was held yesterday evening. Among other questions discussed was the question of carrying concealed weapons. Finally a committee was oppointed to draft a suitable law to be presented at the next meeting of the body. The legislature, at its next session, will be asked to amend the state law, making the penalty imprisonment for carrying weapons con-cealed about the person. The town council will then make the corporation law conform to that of the state. This move is acquiesced in by all good citizens of the town.

S .- Father Sentenne, preaching in Notre Dame church, spoke against the revised rules of the Knights of Labor, which were arranged to suit the Catholic cleary of this province, and advised his hearers who were members of the organization to withdraw, as he considered the whole matter a trap for workingmen.

ONLY SLEEPING.

Commasder B. F. Chandler Comes to Life and Asks for Food.

New York, Nov. 3.—The Herald's special from Ouset Bay, Mich., states that Com-mander B. F. Chandler, United States navy, retired, who was supposed to have died on Sunday from the effects of a paralytic shock sustained on the previous Wednesday, did not die then, as was reported. The undertaker had prepared the body for burial, and was about to make the necessary incisions for the purpose of embalming when the supposed corpse sat up with open eyes and ex-claimed; "What's all this fuss about?"

The undertaker dropped his instruments and nearly fainted. "I want something to eat," was the next exclamation of the old officer. As soon as those around him could rally their senses, the desired food, an ovster stew, was provided. The captain ate heartily and that night be slept soundly. His phy-sician began to hope for his complete recovery, but yesterday afternoon the patient suffered another shock of paralysis and was unable to rally. He again sank into coma and apparent death, and the physician and relatives believe that he has fluxlly passed away.

Quiet at the Chicago Stockyards. CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—The stockyards were almost deserted, work being generally suspended on account of election. The meeting of the union butchers was not prolific of any positive results, the action taken being the appointment of a committee representing the eighteen branches of work in the packing houses to take charge of the strike. It was decided to adhere to the demand for a maintensine of the eight-hour day. It was agreed that the men should keep out of the yards and avoid any demonstration against the men who remained at work. There was no illfeeling manifested a gainst the packers, and all seemed sanguine of an early settle-

Fork Packers' Strike in St. Louis. St. Louis, Nov. 3 .- The 550 men at Whittaker's pork packing establishment in East St. Louis, struck yesterday against a proposed increase in working time from nine to ten hours per day. The men remained in the vicinity and are virtually in possession of the buildings, and declare they will not allow men to take their places. Trouble is feared, especially as the police force of East St. Louis is of very little account. If there is any disturbance the militia will have to be relied on. The men, however, say that there will be no breach of the peace on their part.
